

Education

Everyone knows what has gone wrong. Discipline in schools has become near impossible for teachers to impose. There are too many 'experts' foisting theories about how children should be taught which simply don't work. The Tories – just before an election – say they want to make discipline in schools a priority. But it was under their rule that things went downhill. Can we really trust them to do much? Experience suggest otherwise.

Law & Order

What has caused the collapse in law and order that we've seen in Britain in past years? It's the baleful combination of 'political correctness', which sees criminals as victims of unjust social structures, not as wrongdoers who must be punished, and the mania for paperwork imposed on the police. It seems to many that fighting crime is not the priority for the police that it used to be.

Too many officers are off on race and gender diversity awareness courses, too few are on duty in our towns and villages. That is not their fault. The blame lies with their political masters. Now is your opportunity to call the old gang politicians to account.

Pensions

The plight of many older people is a public scandal. Despite the vast increase in public spending under New Labour, millions do not even get the basic state pension. Since so many of us have no, or poor, private pension provision this should concern people of all ages. We stand for a decent state pension for our old folk, not handouts for asylum seekers.

ADRIAN DAVIES was educated at Cambridge University, where he took a first class degree in modern languages, later going on to take a law degree at London University. He is a practising barrister, with chambers in London. He was formerly an active member of the Conservative Party, but broke decisively with the Tories some years ago, seeing the need for a new party of the patriotic right when John Major's obsessive Europhilia led us into the disaster of ERM membership, while successive 'Conservative' leaders sought to appease the politically correct metropolitan elites by abjectly aping Labour, embracing every modishly 'inclusive' liberal pro-minority fad. He then helped to form the Freedom Party, to give the British people a new and independent voice.

"We want our country back!"

Adrian Davies
Your Freedom Party candidate

Now that Tony Blair is back in Downing Street for four more inglorious years, England has never been in greater need of vocal and effective opposition to the ghastly, politically correct New Labour clique that misrules us, pursuing only the interests of dodgy foreign asset strippers, gang masters, bogus asylum seekers, neo-con warmongers, European bureaucrats and, above all, the vanity and self-aggrandisement of Tony's cronies in parliament, business and the media.

The Freedom Party will offer effective opposition to the Blair regime. The Tories can't and won't. The three-times-defeated Conservative party has lost its way. So incoherent has it become that it cannot even agree how to elect its own leader. Whether it chooses an ageing Europhile or a ghastly, rich young Tory boy from Notting Hill, you can be sure that it won't stem the asylum seeker tide (any such suggestion would shock the liberal metropolitan elite whose favour the Tories now curry); it won't oppose Bush's wars, for the Tories love American far more than England; it won't fight for British interests in Europe (after all, Ted Heath took us into the EU in the first place); and it certainly won't seek to prevent your job being exported to a factory in China or a call centre in Bangalore, since that would displease its greedy friends in big business, who always put their own interests before those of the nation.

WHERE WE STAND

A look at the policies of the Freedom Party

Immigration

Each year, nearly a quarter of a million economic migrants, 'asylum-seekers' and new arrivals from all over the world come to Britain – a city the size of Birmingham every four or five years, an influx that is rapidly changing the nature of our society out of all recognition, without any democratic mandate from the British people. In some parts of the country the native British have become a minority in our own land. Meanwhile, the rapidly increasing population is fuelling a housing crisis, as rural and suburban areas are unable to cope with the demand for new homes from townfolk fleeing to the country to escape the muggings, drug dealing, drive-by shootings and rioting that characterize the rich diversity of our vibrant multi-cultural cities. As a result, vast tracts of the greenbelt and the countryside are being ploughed up and turned into housing estates.

As a matter of absolute public priority, we must halt immigration, cease to accept asylum seekers, who have all passed through other safe countries to get here, deport all illegal immigrants, overstayers and failed asylum seekers, and put an end to the multi-culturalism and politically correct attitudes that are helping to erode Britain's culture and identity. We say – Enoch Powell was right!

The European Union

The vast majority of our people do not want the European Union to rule our country. Yet none of the three main parties are prepared to offer real opposition to Brussels rule. There is no hope of reforming the EU, let alone bringing back powers to democratic control by our parliament, if we say that we will not leave no matter what. Staying out of the Euro has been good for Britain, and a more general renegotiation of our relationship with the EU will serve the national interest far better than the "ever closer union" of the Eurocrats' dreams.

On the other hand it is wrong to suggest (as the single issue UKIP does) that all our problems can be laid at Brussels' door. Our abjectly pro-American, pro-war foreign policy is none of the EU's doing, and the waves of asylum seekers heading for England come here because of our domestic politicians' dereliction of duty over more than half a century. We therefore favour a more flexible, reformist approach to our relations with the EU, not a simplistic policy of wanting out regardless of the consequences, and with no clear plan for the future

Foreign Policy

What presently passes for 'British' foreign policy amounts (in the words of the late, great Enoch Powell at the outset of the first Iraq war) to finding out what the Americans want, and doing it. Tories and Labour alike supported the Iraq war, which has reduced that unfortunate country to even greater misery than it endured under Saddam Hussain. The blood of the British soldiers who have died in a futile foreign quarrel, and of the Iraqi women and children whose deaths are shrugged off as "collateral damage" is on their hands. If Blair commits British troops to an American war of aggression against Syria and Iran, no doubt the Tory "opposition" will dutifully tag along in another bloody and futile adventure.

We would do better to mind Britain's business, and mend fences with our friends and trading partners in the Arab and Muslim world. Bring our boys back and give peace a chance!

Keep South Staffs a "no fly" zone!

One major regional airport at Birmingham is quite enough for the West Midlands. Popular local Freedom Party Councillor, Sharron Edwards, has been a tireless campaigner against the proposed expansion of little Halfpenny Green airport into a busy and noisy new Wolverhampton Airport, and, if elected, I shall join her in opposing this senseless scheme, which will adversely affect local residents' quality of life

Adrian Davies and Freedom Party councillor, Sharron Edwards – opposing airport expansion

The Economy and Public Services

Labour is wasting enormous sums of money by employing more and more civil servants, yet the public services are so poor that the NHS cannot even keep its hospitals clean, or provide dentists to much of the population, despite asset stripping the third world of desperately needed health care professionals, while at the same time refusing British medical students a decent grant to support them in their long years of study. The Freedom Party wishes to see public money reach the people who need it, not pay for contrived jobs which only look good on paper – and generate plenty of it!

The NHS must become again what its founders intended, namely a service for our own people, not health tourists from all over the world, who have never paid a penny of tax or national insurance here, and never will. Meanwhile the real economy which produces tradeable goods and service is suffocated by more and more taxes and regulations. The third Labour term will end in savage recession.

The appalling problems faced by the British motor manufacturing industry, and by so many other British enterprises, are the fault of Tories and Labour alike, for both believe that our economy should be a free-for-all for every foreign producer, so that our home industries – particularly here in the West Midlands – are under threat. We would do better to follow the lead of the Germans, French, Koreans, Japanese and Chinese, and urge our people to buy home-produced goods first! Go to Germany, and you will see Volkswagen, BMW and Mercedes cars on the road; go to France, and you will see Peugeot and Renault cars everywhere. We have to wake up and do as our competitors do – secure the home market first by buying British!

We must revive British agriculture and fisheries, and tear up the EU diktats which have brought these sectors to their knees. We cannot survive as a nation on call centres, mobile phone networks, financial services and shelf-stacking in supermarkets.
